No. 12

Jakob left for Israel in 1934 as a pioneer, and there took part in all the wars of independence for the new state. Here is an Israeli, moulded by the new Judaic spirit, a spirit expressing the exaltation of the Regained Land. Jakob uses a mixture of metal dust and oil-colors, which is applied to the canvas by means of a plastic material. The result is a kind of primeval abstract art, where the limestone occasionally emerges, giving the impression of fossilization.

It is remarkable that, starting with the use of metal, Jakob succeeds in changing the mere medium, and creates a galaxy of paintings which all become a hymn to the crust of the earth, to the rind of the rocks, with their erosions, their bubbles, the boiling of volcanic material, their ridges and crevices, from which emerge light blues, yellows, greens. This is the passion which he persistently expresses for the Regained Land. This ancestral land, reconquered by extreme struggle, menaced on all sides, which has given him this vision so intimately tied to that of the earthly element, and the ancient land, formerly burnt by the sun, eroded, but which now is colored with all the promise of future harvests.
